52.5% of 3DX Chat players maintain at least one alt. Here's why I don't.

Very few people just are what they are. Most of us, the vast majority in fact, express very different versions of ourselves depending on where we are and who we're with. Odds are you behave differently with your friends than you do with your boss. Your parents than you do with a sibling. When you're alone than when you're in public. Only those who are supremely confident, utterly callous or socially clueless behave in a perfectly consistent manner in all company.

Not many people would say that a person is being "fake" by treating their spouse differently than, say, a co-worker. And that's because we recognize that there are unwritten rules when it comes to behaving appropriately, and ignoring them can have very significant social, and even legal, repercussions.

Having a presence in a virtual world requires us to have an avatar, and seeing as we find ourselves in a whole new social situation when online it's not surprising that most of us behave differently in a virtual environment than we might in the real world. It's not an issue of being "fake"—merely a normal adjustment we make, just as we do in every other facet of our lives.

So far I think most people with any online experience would agree with me. But what about alts? Without a doubt there are several completely justifiable reasons to have an alternate identity online, such as privacy concerns or to better enjoy an ongoing roleplay. But establishing a serious, separate, secondary online identity does seem a bit... dubious. At least to me.

In the last issue of Cybersex magazine we learned that only 47.5% of 3DX players don't have any alts, meaning that the majority do. And even if we write off half of those cases as being avatars used for "legitimate" purposes, that still leaves over a thousand other alts roaming the game.

Within this issue you'll find the article "In Defense of Alts" by DarkAmber, which offers some interesting psychological and sociological perspectives on this phenomenon, and that spurred me to consider why I make the personal choice not to maintain an alt.

For me, the relationships I have online are tremendously important. I don't have "online friends". They're simply friends. I don't have "online lovers". They're lovers, pure and simple. And though I understand there's always likely to be a significant difference between our avatars and our real life selves, to me there's a profound honesty you can encounter online that you rarely find in the real world.

I have had gentlemen share kinks with me in 3DX that they've never mentioned to their wives in decades of marriage. Had people tell me stories about their hopes and dreams that they'd never shared with those closest to them in the real world. Had people open up to me about unpopular religious and political beliefs that they'd normally never express for fear of ridicule and ostracization.

I treasure and respect those glimpses people allow me of their truest, most vulnerable selves. And in reciprocation I desire to be as real as I can with everyone I meet online. Maybe my avatar is analogous to a mask I wear, but at least I always wear the same one, and I hope that inspires the trust and intimacy I treasure.

Surviving a Virtual Breakup

Virtual relationships. Real emotions.

By JamieSweet

I've always taken issue with the term "virtual relationship", as I've found it to be very misleading. Yes, some relationships are between ourselves and people we've met online, and in that regard they're virtual. But behind every avatar is a living, thinking, feeling human being, and the connections we develop with them in virtual environments can be every bit as deep and meaningful as those we have with people in the real world.

This is why people date online. Why they have weddings and celebrate anniversaries, and why it can be devastating when such relationships end. The relationship may be virtual, but the emotions aren't. And if you find yourself in a breakup you're going to need to cope with them.

For those that have never gone through a breakup, buckle up, because you're about to enter one of the worst (and then best) times of your life, and in this article I'm going to cover things nobody ever seems to talk about when it comes to making a speedy and healthy emotional recovery.

Though it can hard to see in that moment when someone breaks your heart, what you're about to experience is going to be about more than just pain and trauma. It's also going to be about personal growth, and then real joy.

The joy part is one of those things no one talks about, but once the pain subsides there you'll be, filled with experience and wisdom and ready to take on the world.

You Have to Grieve

Your ex might have been the worst person in the world, treating you awfully and making you downright despise them. Yet regardless of that it's still natural to mourn when you lose someone, and that's doubly true when they were a perfectly good person, but things simply didn't work out.

Well meaning friends might try to dismiss your feelings for your ex as being foolish, and encourage you to simply shut them out of your heart and move on. But the fact remains that your ex and you shared good moments, and for a time they had a special place in your life. So don't fight the impulse to grieve, and don't beat yourself up about missing someone even if they treated you badly.

Grief is essential to the healing process, and trying to skip past it will do more harm than good in the long run. It might even affect your ability to have positive relationships in the future as buried pain never has a chance to truly dissipate.

You're Going to be Lonely

When you spend a lot of time with someone, and then suddenly stop seeing that person, it's natural that you're going to wind up with a temporary gap in your life. Even if your time with that person was miserable you'll experience their absence, and this can be a hard thing to deal with.

Human beings, like dolphins and parrots, are a fundamentally social species, and we're not meant to be alone. Without a healthy support system we're likely to settle for sub-optimal relationships because their preferable to the loneliness, or worse yet, try to go back to the person we just left even though we know damn well that relationship isn't going to work any better the second time around.

This is the time to lean on friends and family, and fill that gap with good company while you re-establish yourself with new habits and routines. It's this process that keeps us from settling, and those who fail to seek company often find themselves bouncing from one doomed relationship to another.

You're Going to Want Your Ex Back

As you're recovering from your breakup you're likely going to have moments when you miss your ex terribly, but that's not what I'm talking about here.

What nobody tells you is that once you've mended your broken heart and re-established your independence, you'll likely start having strange thoughts such as "I wonder how they're doing" or "Now that I've had a chance to think about what went wrong, I bet we could do better if we tried again".

Such thoughts are almost inevitable, but dangerous if acted upon. It's like poking at freshly healed wounds, (and poking at your ex's freshly healed wounds too). Just understand this is a normal part of recovery in which your brain is trying to make sense of everything, and this is not the time to try to revive the relationship.

No, You Can't Be Friends

A breakup is not the time to be friends with your ex. Friends lean on each other for support, and the last person you should be doing that with is the one you just split with.

Think of your ex as a drug, and your time apart as your chance to detox. Keep spending time with them, and you're never going to get to clarity. Never going to have the chance to heal. And that's why you need strict boundaries—like no contact with them till you're both completely recovered. Remove them from your friend list. Drop them from social media. And avoid the places you know they frequent. You'll be doing yourself, and them, a favor.

You'll Likely Act Like an Idiot

One night, soon after your breakup, you'll be wandering the virtual world alone. You'll be feeling nostalgic. You'll be overthinking your life. And the temptation will be there to seek out your ex.

The result won't be anything positive.

If you're hunting around the virtual world looking for them you're going to appear crazy or creepy or both, and it'll be even worse if you find them. After all, what are you going to say that doesn't sound desperate?

Instead, write down what you want to say to your ex, then put it away in a drawer for a few days before re-visiting it. Odds are excellent that when you read what you wrote you'll end up thinking, "Oh thank goodness I didn't talk to them. That sounds so stupid."

You'll Grow as a Person

Yes, breakups are the worst. But once you get through them and look back, you'll see that they're also kind of the best things that can happen to you.

Breakups allow you to learn what you want out of life and teach you about who you are. They give you the strength to deal with loss gracefully, and open a path to better, deeper, more meaningful relationships that your old ones could never have been.

In short, breakups are some of the key defining moments in our lives. Seize that opportunity to grow.

You'll Bounce Back

It's a fact that you can't truly appreciate joy without sorrow. And yes, the long night of your breakup is going to be cold and miserable, but that's only going to make the dawn that's coming all the warmer.

You'll get to mix things up. Redesign your avatar. Frequent new rooms. Meet new people. Find new lovers. Maybe learn new skills like building or DJing. The virtual world will be your oyster, and this time of growth and exploration is going to be delicious.

Before you know it, you'll be a better person than you ever were with your ex, and you'll be glad you got to go through the bad times because they're the ones that made you smarter, stronger and happier.

And that's the time, if you're so inclined, to start looking for another relationship.

Now You Know

Knowing what to expect means you can prepare both yourself and your friends for what is to come, and that means you'll have an excellent chance to avoid the mistakes that'll prolong the heartache. You deserve to be happy, and now you know the quickest path to get there.

I know it hurts, but trust me. The future will be bright.

The 2019 Cybersex Survey

Your opportunity to help us better understand the virtual world... for science!

By JamieSweet

Serious research on virtual lifestyles and behavior is rare as hen's teeth, but that doesn't mean there aren't questions many of us want answers to. After all, how can we possibly know if our beliefs about virtual worlds and their inhabitants are really accurate if we never try to collect reliable and independent data?

So, in the interests of science (specifically sociology), Cybersex magazine would like to formally invite you to participate in a completely anonymous survey regarding yourself, your relationships and your sex life online.

We ask only that you be completely honest when answering the survey, as falsehoods will only cloud our collective understanding of the virtual environment in which many of us spend so much of our free time.

So, without further ado, please click on the link in the bottom right corner of this page to proceed to the survey questions. Results will be tallied and published in the December issue of Cybersex magazine, with the identities of all participants remaining 100% and permanently anonymous.

Lastly, please note that any and all questions in the survey can be skipped if you prefer not to answer.

The Questions

#1. Which adult virtual worlds have you been a member of in the past 12 months? Select all that apply.

#2. How many close, personal friendships have you established and consistently maintained in adult virtual worlds over the past 12 months?

#3. Have you been part of a romantic relationship, such as prolonged dating or marriage, within an adult virtual world, over the past 12 months?

#4. Is your real world biological gender male or female?

#5. In regards to 3DX Chat, how many alts do you normally maintain and utilize in the game?

#6. Is your primary 3DX Chat avatar male, female or transgendered (transsexual or futanari)?

#7. Generally speaking, how many days per week do you log on to 3DX Chat for 30 minutes or more?

#8. Generally speaking, how many times per week do you engage in cybersex with other players on 3DX Chat?

#9. Generally speaking, how many partners do you engage in cybersex with per week on 3DX Chat? Example: If you regularly have cybersex four times per week, but each time it's with the same person, the correct answer to this question would be "one".

#10. Which of the following sexual practices / kinks do you regularly engage in during cybersex on 3DX Chat? Select all that apply. ❤️

An Alien Mind

Beyond blue skin and tentacles.

By Vileni

People roleplay all kinds of non-humans online. Everything from elves to orcs, demons to werewolves and vampires to nekos. And perhaps the choices listed above are so popular because they're all well-known and defined, courtesy of pop culture.

But what if you want to roleplay something that's not so human? What if you want to roleplay something a bit more... alien?

Well, the obvious choice is to do just that: roleplay another species from the depths of space. And there's certainly plenty of those available off the proverbial shelf. Well-developed alien species like Vulcans and Asari are abundant, but you run into the issue of simply roleplaying what someone else imagined, as with the other races or species mentioned above.

And that's a shame, because most of the fun that comes from roleplaying isn't merely rehashing the old, but creating and exploring the new. By taking the time to craft your own species, you have a tremendous opportunity to exercise your creativity, while giving others the chance to interact, both socially and sexually, with a being they have no idea what to expect from.

Yes, there will be people only interested in your alien because they want the novelty of fucking someone with blue skin. Or those who've watched a few too many hentai videos and want to play "naughty tentacles".

But there will also be those who want to engage in erotic roleplay that's as intellectual and philosophical as it is exotic, and this article is your guide to enabling those kind of wonderful close encounters.

Building from the Inside Out

The first thing you need to consider when developing an alien species is how you're going to craft a character you not only can roleplay, but will really want to roleplay.

And to do that, you need to start with who you are as a person. What are your interests? Your values? Your beliefs? Your fears and desires? Your kinks?

Begin by writing down a few of your own key traits, until you have a brief description of who you are as a person. An example of such a list might look something like this...

- Pacifist
- Environmentalist
- Animal Lover
- Enjoys Trance Music
- Loves the Beach
- Dislikes Crowds
- Nudist
- Loves Oral Sex

You know you can roleplay as a being that has those traits because you are a being that has those traits, so your performance is going to be highly convincing. But the next question is why your alien is like that, and that's where the creative process can get really interesting.

As an example, let's begin with the "pacifist" trait listed above. There are many reasons an alien might have a strong aversion to war, be it historical, psychological or cultural.

It could be that their species were once brought to the brink of extinction through a nuclear conflict, and the experience made them adamant to never repeat the same horrifying mistake.

It could be that they evolved from a prey species both highly docile and empathic, and thus find the very thought of violence nauseating. The idea of hurting another being might seem just as bad to them as getting hurt themselves. Perhaps even worse.

It could be that they're a species that sees violence as great, but only in the context of fair and honorable combat. They might have an utterly blood drenched culture full of deadly duels and elaborate death sports, but never engage in war because they consider it cowardly and barbaric.

And of course, there are a hundred other reasons an alien might be a pacifist. You don't need to start off by detailing some huge and elaborate history, but it's a good idea to lay out the broad brushstrokes of why your alien is the way he/she/it is. Work through your traits, and come up with creative reasons behind each.

Physiology & Sexuality

3DX Chat is a sex game, and as such, a large component of roleplaying an alien is going to revolve around getting busy. To make that interesting and realistic, it's important to consider your alien's physiology.

Are they warm or cold-blooded? Do they have two biological genders like humans, or more, or fewer? Do they give birth to live young, or lay eggs, or reproduce by some other means? Are they rather human-like because of convergent evolution, or do they only appear that way because they have technology that hides their true form? Do they get pleasure out of sex in the same way humans do, or do they have special erogenous zones / mating habits?

What does your alien's skin and hair feel like? What's their scent? Are they soft and cuddly or aggressive and rough? All this will play into the descriptions you use when engaged in affection, foreplay and cybersex.

Which of course brings about the question of why an alien might want to have sex with a human to begin with, which in turn opens up many more interesting possibilities.

While it's incredibly unlikely that any alien species would ever naturally be able to interbreed with humans in the conventional sense, that doesn't mean there aren't any possibilities in that regard. An alien, for example, might implant an egg into a host which remains warm and protected inside their body until ready to hatch. They might have undergone genetic modification which made them reproductively compatible with humans before arriving on Earth. Or they may have sperm which, rather than combining with the genetic material in a human egg, simply overwrites it entirely, thus using the human host to grow a clone of the father.

Then, of course, there's the possibility that an alien wouldn't care about breeding whatsoever, and merely wants to have recreational sex for the simple pleasure of it. In fact, making love to a human might be preferable to having sex with one of their own kind, for the simple reason that not only is there zero chance of an unplanned pregnancy, but human STDs do not affect them.

Whatever the case, sex may be extremely casual in an alien culture, or seen as an important part of establishing positive relations with other sentient species. It might have special cultural or religious significance, or may be something that your alien views as utterly normal and mundane as yawning.

By putting a bit of thought into what sex is like with your alien, and what motivates them to have it, you have the opportunity to treat your partners to a potentially amazing sexual experience. After all, with everything being new and exciting, and your partner not quite knowing what to expect, having sex with an alien can be like being a virgin again. And how fun is that!

Alien Improv

There are endless things to consider when roleplaying a realistic and exciting extraterrestrial, but that doesn't mean you need to write an encyclopedia about your interstellar species before you begin. Part of the joy of roleplay is the improvisation—simply making things up as you go along and then figuring them out later.

As such, it's important to enter the game with an open mind, and just be willing to let your imagination run wild. Roleplayed conversations can result in all kinds of questions you didn't anticipate, thus giving you the opportunity to explore and develop your character over time.

If someone, for example, asks what your character's home world is like, just take the first thing that pops into your head and go from there.

Maybe your alien's home is much like Earth. Maybe it's a vast, planet-spanning city. Maybe it's an emerald desert dotted with bejewelled oases, a volcanic jungle filled with carnivorous plants or a global ocean strung with endless archipelagos of pearlescent sand. Maybe your alien doesn't even have a home planet, but grew up onboard a spaceship, their species' original home world left behind so many generations ago so as to have been completely forgotten .

Whatever answer you give becomes a springboard to the next question, thus entertaining both you and the people you roleplay with.

Design Your Playscape

Not everyone is a great builder, but if you happen to have some skills in that department, don't be shy to create an environment to complement your alien. This could take the form of a starship, a "holodeck" or a distant world, to which your alien has the ability to teleport their lovers.

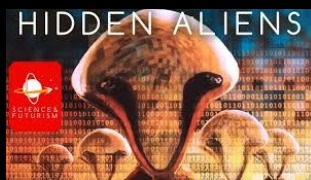

As you create, you'll find that your build starts to shape your alien's story, and vice-versa, making for an even more interesting experience for those lucky enough to roleplay with you.

World builder is filled with a fantastic range of textures, shapes and colors to experiment with, and by letting your imagination run wild you may find there's a huge payoff in the experiences you'll get to share.

Ideas are Everywhere

Looking for inspiration? Science fiction is filled with countless examples of alien species, from the virtually human to those barely recognizable as even being alive. And the more you read and watch, the more ideas you can fashion, modify or just plain steal to help make your character more interesting.

In fact, there's an amazing series of videos on YouTube which thoroughly explores dozens of alien species from fiction, while providing science-backed speculation regarding who may be coming to visit us!

Miss November: Dotje

Meet Dotje, our 3DX player of the month!

By JamieSweet

For ages there has been a sharp dichotomy between the virgin and the slut.

The virgin is seen as pure. Serious. Intelligent. Principled. She is the clean, confident woman guys bring home to meet their parents. The one destined to be a great mother, teacher and friend. The ideal archetype for the young woman setting out on the adventure that is her life. And the slut is, supposedly, the opposite of all that.

But Dotje is a good example of why we might want to take a closer look at those stereotypes.

As a true slut, she both gives pleasure to others and claims it for herself. She's serious about her attractiveness. Has the wits and charisma to charm. The worldliness to shape her own life and balance the emotions and desires of not just herself, but her lovers. She is independent, practicing personal responsibility and shaping her own destiny. She is the equal of her male peers, seeking nothing from them save mutual pleasure and genuine friendship.

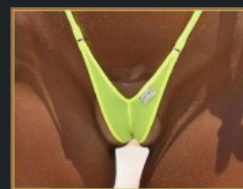

In short, to be a true slut, a woman must be like Dotje—a mix of courtesan, diplomat, psychologist and performer. She needs to develop and refine herself to be desirable on every level, and have the strength of character to ignore the nasty whispers of the self-righteous.

Meanwhile, to be a virgin, all you have to do is sit down, shut up and cross your legs. It's inherently a negative identity—one you don't claim it by achieving something, but rather by not doing anything at all.

Of course I'm not suggesting every woman who's promiscuous is some amazing dynamo of empowered femininity, nor every virgin a vacuous do-nothing. I'm simply saying that, in a comparison between the two extremes, being a true slut requires far, far more of the individual.

With Dotje there is no pretense. No arrogance. Just kindness, generosity and intelligence wrapped up in smooth curves and sensuality. She elevates sluttiness into an art form, making 3DX a richer experience for every lover she takes.

Is being a slut for everyone? No. But for those women who want to embrace the antithesis of the virgin, there could be no better role model then Dotje. ❤️

10 Sex Objects

...that actually still work!

By JamieSweet

Ever since the implementation of the new 64-Bit Client in 3DX Chat, many weird and wonderful sex objects (furniture and devices designed specifically for sex) have simply ceased to function. Dozens of the most creative and titillating items ever to grace the game have been reduced to digital relics, and will likely never work again.

That good news is that there are still a plethora of such objects whose designs were not impacted by the client, and they're all available for free download on the 3dxmodz.com website! Here are ten of my favorites... (Please note that you must be logged into 3DXmodz.com in order to use this page's hyperlinks).

Whipping Station by Veronique

A favorite of BDSM fans, the whipping station has been a staple of 3DX dungeons since February 2018, and with over 1,300 downloads, odds are good you've at least seen (if not experienced) this sex object at least a few times.

Schaukelpferd Rocking Horse by Tina

As cute as it is very, very naughty, this sexual rocking horse is not only a fun addition to your erotic playroom—but can make for great cybersex and erotic roleplay regardless of a couple's kinks. Download this toy to your bedroom, then invite your significant other to go riding!

Alexa's Glory Mini Bar by Lady Alexa

What do you get for the person who has everything (including a penis)? Well, what could be nicer than enjoying a cold, refreshing drink while getting "serviced" by your significant other. Alexa's Glory Mini Bar makes a great addition to any playroom, sex club or BDSM dungeon.

Natural Dildos & Vibes Bundle by BDG

Though technically more decoration than functioning sex objects, I couldn't leave this incredibly sexy collection of toys out off the list.

Whipping Station

Schaukelpferd Rocking Horse

With everything from the conventional to the insane, there's something for everyone!

Gyn-Chair With Anal Beads by Veronique

This sex object brings a whole new meaning to the word "exposed". A perfect plaything for couples not shy about experimenting with simultaneous vaginal and anal pleasuring, this creation is wonderfully wicked yet versatile in that it doesn't drift into explicitly BDSM territory.

Leashed Collection by Kyria

Definitely one for the Dominants and submissives, the leashed collection offers a sexy new way to brazenly display your relationship. With several leashed poses to choose from, this is definitely a "must download" for those into power exchange.

Sex Swings by JamieSweet

Yeah, I have to admit there may be a tiny bit of bias involved when it came to my decision to add this sex object to the list (seeing as I'm the one that made it). That said, the sex swings have a very broad base of potential users, suitable for everyone from the most vanilla couples to the wildest.

Alexa's Glory Mini Bar

Natural Dildos & Vibes Bundle

Double Dildo by KathrinGER

Sorry guys, but there are times when we girls just want to have some fun with each other. And what could be a better way to enjoy that quality time than by using this intensely erotic sapphic sex object? Definitely a download for every bisexual or lesbian female.

Push My Buttons by Kyria

Not all sexual roleplay is about roses and chocolates. Some is downright dark and dangerous, allowing lovers to explore their most forbidden fantasies. This build most definitely belongs in the latter category, and is amazingly well done. A great download for the adventurous.

Dildo + Cum by KathrinGER

There are lots of fun sex objects in 3DX, but only a few which I'd really say allow you to have a "porn star" experience. Dildo + Cum is absolutely fantastic, and highly recommended to any couples into toy play, bukake or gangbangs. ❤️

The People of World Chat

The Good, the Bad and the Weird of 3DX.

By JamieSweet

Imagine a never-ending highway lined with billboards, each informing you of another fun adult attraction available at the next turnoff. Great clubs. Awesome events. Sexy escorts. Spectacular nude beaches.

But billboards aren't the only things that can be found down this particular stretch of asphalt.

There's also some incredibly considerate people who volunteer their time to help new travelers, incredibly nasty people who throw bricks at your car if you so much as look at them funny, and straight-up weirdos who would like to talk to you about joining a religion based entirely on bacon.

That's World Chat in a nutshell, which is why the vast majority of 3DX players either never visit it, or drive fast with the doors locked and windows rolled up.

The Good

If you observe World Chat long enough you'll see that there are some truly friendly and helpful people there, such as DevillInside and SkyLynx.

They're the ones who reach out and help new players looking for direction, providing the closest thing 3DX has to in-game customer support. They're also the ones who help spread useful news about updates, glitches and upcoming features, helping to keep the rank and file players informed of such things.

In short they provide a very useful service to the game, and they do so consistently, kindly and despite the insanity (and sometimes outright abuse) they're endlessly bombarded with by other world chat denizens. In short, they're the unsung heroes of 3DX Chat, and I salute them.

The Bad

While World Chat features some of the nicest people in the game, it also features some of the worst, and I'm not talking about entertaining 4-Chan style trolling or people merely being politically incorrect. I'm talking about players who are really, really, really horrible human beings.

They seem to endlessly heap raw, hateful abuse on anyone and everyone, squealing delusional self-aggrandizement between outpourings of pure vitriol. No doubt they've already been ignored by literally hundreds of other players, and as they're completely incapable of obtaining good attention they rage and provoke in a frantic effort to get the bad kind.

World Chat in a nutshell.

I'm not going to name names for two simple reasons. The first is that their behavior instantly identifies them. The second is that I seriously believe at least a couple of them are mentally ill, and certainly shouldn't be encouraged to pursue their mindless self-destruction online. These people have my pity, though not to the degree that I'd ever want to deal with them.

The Weird

Once you place the maniacs on ignore, there is a third type of World Chat habitué that quickly becomes apparent—and those are the weirdos.

Without a doubt most of these are normal people with an offbeat sense of humor, killing time by teasing and bamboozling their fellow players with a river of nonsense.

And then there's a few, such as Neolithic, who have been going on and on with their particular brand of strangeness so long that you have to wonder if they are, in fact, quite mad (though in the nicest possible way).

Here are just a few gems of history and wisdom I was able to pick up from him...

"3DX used to be more social. Sure, some people hated me because I'm a lawn tractor and because I brought the Word of the Swine to the people. Still, for the most part people loved the swine and the swine loved them."

"I am really here to serve others. I first came years ago right after the Bacon Rapture to serve those who were left behind. I think I have developed quite the following among those who still hope for salvation."

"You know, some people say that you always remember the song that was paying the first time you get gonorrhea, but say that the designated hitter has ruined the game of baseball."

"Do you need THE HYPNOSIS?"

What's the hypnosis? Trust me, you don't want to know.

Conclusion

World Chat is probably the most often ignored, yet strangest virtual ecosystem in 3DX Chat. In other games moderators would have long ago sterilized it into a bland stream of small talk, but in the quasi-anarchistic environment allowed by the 3DX developers something way more interesting has developed: a kind of collective stream of consciousness made up of the very best, and worst, and colorful minds.

So the next time you're driving down that proverbial highway, consider pulling over and visiting with the locals. You might meet a super nice person, get screamed at by a raging lunatic, or get lectured on the benefits of an all-bacon diet.

But you sure as heck won't be bored. ❤️

I Don't Pay For It

The sad misconception men have about 3DX escorts.

By JamieSweet

Some men on 3DX don't employ escorts, and that's fine.

Everyone has their preferences, and I'd never shame anyone for not being into escorts any more than I would hassle them for hiring one. What's interesting, though, is that when I've asked such men why they don't, I've invariably gotten the same answer again and again and again.

And that answer has been that they want the women they sleep with to genuinely desire them—not do it merely because they were paid to. These men don't want to be “tolerated”. They don't want to “force” themselves on girls. They simply want the sex they have, be it a meaningless quickie or a months long relationship, to be mutually desired.

These are decent, caring men, and I can understand and sympathize with the sentiment, but there's a very important factor that they miss, and it's costing them a lot of truly wonderful experiences they could be having.

What these men don't get is that a 3DX escort is not a slave. She isn't some helpless victim forced in prostitution against her will. She's a fellow player with a very special kink and fantasy, and if you think a she plays with just anyone you're mistaken. The reason a 3DX escort will even accept a man's gifts in the first place is because of two main reasons.

The first is that he's showing a genuine interest in her kink. Rather than handwaving it away, he's effectively saying, “I know you have this fantasy, and I want to help you make it happen.” Rather than merely trying to talk his way into her panties, he's showing he has both the confidence and consideration to indulge her sexuality, and is willing to roleplay her favorite scenario with her.

Secondly, he's showing her real respect. Treating her as an equal. He's recognizing that she's not some mindless fairy tale damsel in distress, nor some desperate victim whoring herself to feed her children. She's a human being who is using 3DX to explore and indulge her fantasies, and who is eager to enter into a deeply mutual exchange of sexual excitement.

3DX escorts play with the men who hire them because those men are overwhelmingly confident, considerate and respectful which, by the way, is pretty much the perfect recipe for a fantastic lover.

Go try and hire an escort while behaving rude and boorish, and you'll quickly find there's not enough gifts in the virtual world to buy one second of her time, let alone an hour. The reason a 3DX escort asks for symbolic payment is because it's part of her fantasy, not because she's somehow going to pay her mortgage by having a few more gifts on her profile.

So the next time you're feeling a little lonely or bored, and would like to enjoy an evening with a smart, sexy, confident lover, consider treating both yourself, and her, to the experience.

You'll soon discover what so many players on 3DX already have, and that's that a night with a virtual escort may be one of the richest, and most intimate, sexual experiences you ever have online. ❤️ difference!

In Defence of Alts

Most 3DX Chat players have alts, and there's good (and bad) reasons for that.

By DarkAmber

In the October issue of Cybersex, Jamie Sweet published a short article called 3DX By The Numbers in which she shared a bunch of random figures pertaining to the game and its players. One of those numbers was 45.7.

That's the percentage of players who, according to her research, don't have any alts. That must mean that 54.3% do, and that having an alt on 3DX Chat isn't the exception. It's the rule.

So why does the term have such a negative connotation?

Why Alts Matter

When we play 3DX Chat, or any online game for that matter, we have an identity we project. The way our avatar looks. The contents of our profile. The places we frequent. The people on our friends list. They all make up who we are online and, very importantly, how others come to know and relate to us.

Because most people online aren't sociopaths, we develop genuine feelings for each other. Make friendships and connections. And anytime you open yourself up to that you're also opening yourself up to getting hurt. How an alt is used can either enhance or harm your relationships. Build amazing intimacy, or destroy all trust.

So let's take a look at both the good and bad ways in which alts are employed, and examine just why so many players, including myself, choose to have at least one.

Reason One: Privacy

Most serious builders on 3DX maintain an alt simply so that they can work without interruption. Sure you could slap up an "AFK" sign as your profile picture, but not only is it easy to forget to do that, but people invariably miss it and message you anyway. The friendless alt is simply a great way to work in peace, and without the risk of hurting anyone's feelings when their messages get missed because you have the chat window minimized.

Similarly, I know several couples who have alts which only they know about. A special secret they share so that they can meet online and enjoy a few hours of sweet, uninterrupted intimacy together.

Both of these, to my way of thinking, are fantastic uses of alts as they allow players to step back from the "always on" existence many of us have online, and just focus on our creativity and deepest, most important relationships.

Reason Two: Adultery

Marital infidelity is a dicey prospect if you don't have an alt. Not only could you be seen with someone you're not supposed to be with, but even if you stay away from prying eyes it's only a matter of time before your significant other comes online unexpectedly and interrupts your liaison.

Plus more than one cheating spouse has been caught thanks to a well intentioned gift left on their profile, or been exposed by the very person they were cheating with when the affair turned sour.

And that's not even including the fact that, without an alt, the object of your desire may simply refuse to participate in adultery with you. If you're interested in sleeping with your husband's best friend or wife's sister, an alt may literally be the only way to make that happen.

So, for all these reasons and more, why wouldn't you use an alt if you're planning to cheat? It's the virtual equivalent of "Sorry, Dear, but I had to work late at the office again".

Understand, I'm not condoning this practice. Merely saying that it's definitely part of the dark side of alts, and it's naïve to think that some married people—especially those in exclusive relationships—don't maintain a separate identity for just this purpose.

Reason Three: Experimentation

Recently, a male friend I've known on 3DX for more than two years made a confession to me: He not only had a secret alt, and not only was that alt female, but that female just happened to be one of my closest associates.

I felt hurt and angry and betrayed, but for the sake of the years of our friendship and the fact that he was voluntarily coming clean about his deception, I was willing to sit down and listen as to why he'd been maintaining a second identity—and for so long.

The answer surprised me.

First off, he explained that he'd never had sex with his alt. Never entered into any relationship beyond friendship. And that he'd never abused his alt by asking anyone about himself. And all that, to the best of my knowledge, was completely true.

The reason he occasionally used this alt was because he wanted to understand women better. To gain some perspective not just on our in-game experience, but to see what we talked about when there were no men around. How we interacted in their friendships. What we really thought about certain topics and issues.

And he reported that over two years of using his alt a day or two a week, he'd really come to learn a huge amount about what made women tick—and that had forced him to seriously re-examine many of his own beliefs as a man.

The reason he was taking off his mask with me was because he felt he'd learned all that he could, and that he wanted to share what had been an amazing and enlightening experience with me as a friend.

Some would say that what my friend did was wrong, and to be blunt I'd be one of them. But I did understand and appreciate his curiosity, and I was glad that the experience had benefited both him and the women in his life. And I doubt very much that he's the first person to do something like this.

I'd be amazed if there weren't black people walking around in white avatars, or women in male ones—or vice versa—but not out of a desire to deceive. Human beings are curious by nature, and alts are most certainly used to learn and experiment.

Reason Four: Hiding in the Closet

One look at porn will reveal that women have pretty much 100% social licence to be bi or homosexual, and in my experience at least half the women on 3DX have had at least one sexual encounter with another female.

Guys are a whole other story.

Even in the hyper-permissive world of 3DX Chat, masculinity can be surprisingly fragile, and a guy with gay or bisexual leanings might find it very awkward to come out of the closet, just as they might in real life.

So it shouldn't be surprising that some men might choose to sport a transsexual or female avatar so that they can indulge their desires on occasion, while maintaining their regular male identity most of the time.

Is that deceptive? Perhaps even predatory? I would say so. Especially when you're using such an alt to have sex with men who you know don't want to engage in homosexual behavior.

But then again perhaps such an alt might serve as a stepping stone—a path by which they can get comfortable with their sexuality and finally make the choice to get out of the closet.

It's complicated, and another instance in which an alt could be considered both good and bad.

Reason Five: Roleplay

There are those who choose to roleplay fictional characters on 3DX, such as elves, vampires, nekos or aliens. Even futanari could be argued to fall into this category. And for such players a huge amount of their fun comes from the opportunity to step out of their own skins for an evening and be someone else.

Having an alt can allow a person to put on a virtual costume and go incognito, acting and exploring their chosen role without having to break character. And, in my opinion, these alts inject a playful dose of the weird and wonderful into 3DX.

Without them, the place would be a lot less interesting.

Reason Six: Spying

Would your spouse cheat on you if given the chance? Does your best friend really like you, or are they just pretending so as to stay part of your social circle? Just what does your boyfriend get up to when you're not online? What does your girlfriend have to say about you when your metaphorical back is turned?

Relationships on 3DX can be every bit as meaningful as real life ones, and so can the insecurities that come with them. Many of us have wondered the same or similar things as listed above, and for some the temptation to go "undercover" to find answers results in

“...be amazed if there aren't black people walking around in white avatars, or women in male ones—or vice versa—but not out of a desire to deceive. Human beings are curious by nature, and alts are most certainly used to learn and experiment.”

“..we are all shapeshifters, able to switch forms on a whim regardless of whether we actually choose to do so...”

them creating alts specifically to spy on friends or significant others.

In some cases this could be seen as justified, just as hiring a private detective in real life might be. But at least as often, it stems from a neurotic obsession with loyalty or control, and isn't healthy for anyone.

That said, relationships are huge part of 3DX for many players, and most of us harbor insecurities of one kind or another. For better or for worse, the game of love may be rife with espionage online.

Reason Seven: A Fresh Start

There are those on 3DX who, for lack of a better word, have messed up. They've burned bridges with people they've cared about. Gotten entangled in dramas they hate. Been caught in lies which have ruined their reputations. And though they may deeply regret their past actions, there's not too much they can do about it.

Except create an alt and start over with a new identity, of course.

There are many in the history of 3DX who have phased out of one persona and into another, so as to re-establish themselves after a catastrophic social blunder, and it would surprise me if a large percentage of 3DX's players aren't on their second (or third) incarnations. And once again, depending on the situation, this use of alts could be considered good or bad.

Being able to start again under a virtual “witness protection program” gives a person a chance to learn from their mistakes and become a better, kinder, wiser individual.

It also, unfortunately, gives really unpleasant people a chance to escape the social repercussions of their actions and continue behaving abysmally—thus enabling the worst trolls and sociopaths in the game.

Final Thoughts

I am the first to acknowledge that there are a lot of ways in which alts are a bad thing for 3DX, and without argument their use is regularly abused. But I titled my article “In Defence of Alts” because there are at least as many people employing them in positive (or at least neutral ways), and because I would argue that in some ways they help regulate the game's virtual society.

When you're never 100% sure who you're talking to, perhaps you speak with a little more forethought. And when you're never 100% sure of someone's identity, maybe you're a bit more careful of who you play with.

Online we are all shapeshifters, able to switch forms on a whim regardless of whether we actually choose to do so. And like it or not, alts will forever shape our virtual loves and relationships. ❤

RoseAnn

Meet RoseAnn, one of 3DX Chat's most skilled and imaginative world builders.
By JamieSweet

As organizer of SwingSet, I'm always interested in new playrooms for events, and over the past eight months I've been lucky enough to have been offered the creations of several fantastic builders. So when RoseAnn asked me if I'd like a custom built playroom, and invited me to view some of her previous work, I was happy to take a look.

But I certainly wasn't prepared for what I saw.

There are builders on 3DX which have great imaginations. Builders with amazing technical skills. Builders who have the artistry to give their creations real atmosphere and warmth. Builders with a strong sense of functionality. Builders who are masters of visual effects. And builders who have the speed to assemble their designs in record time.

But very few builders have all those traits at once.

RoseAnn is, without question, one of those handful of people, and recently I had the immense good fortune to be taken on a tour of her creations. Below are some of the amazing things I saw, as well as RoseAnn's thoughts on some of her most beloved creations.

The Log Cabin

"This was one of my first builds. I wanted something idyllic. Something small and simple, yet as realistic as I could make it at the time. I was really happy with the result then—and I still am. It was also the project that taught me how to build properly using mathematical principles."

Better Tomorrow

"I grew to love clean builds, and Better Tomorrow is one of my first examples of that. Obsessing over tiny, tiny details that no one else would see. Humoring my interest in sci-fi and visions of the future."

Modern Beach House

"This place was my first really big project. Took me days to put together, and it was really touch and go at first. It's been located on a long shoreline, between mountains, and sat on single rocks. It used to have a pier, and the rooftop was a lot simpler, with a much messier staircase to the pool. Really has transformed over time. But today it's home in 3DX—and I've stopped changing things."

Temple Heart Spa

"The spa was made right after light sources became available. I had just built the place, then got the idea of adding the lights. Basically optimizing the whole location for a night setting. Hadn't done a build like that before. And I might have had sort of a... nudism-friendly phase..."

Several of RoseAnn's incredible creations are now available for free download at 3DXModz.com.

Industrial Rock

"This one reflects my experimentation with a more rough, industrial look—as the name suggests. Wanted so see what I could make out of a pile of concrete, rusty metal and fluorescent lights."

Laurianna's Hot Spot

"Someone dragged me off to watch Iron Man. In the middle of all that I just got taken in by the house on the ocean with its rounded walls. The luxurious feel of it..."

Winter Home

"I wanted to explore the log cabin thing a bit further..."

Several of RoseAnn's incredible creations are now available for free download at 3DXModz.com.

Red Rock (SwingSet Playroom)

"Oh, so much to tell about this one. I actually had an idea carried over from Laurianna's Hot Spot at first. Kind of a rock covered spot of relaxation, a large pool, a much simpler dance floor and not quite so concentrated a play area. Quickly found out that it wouldn't work as well, though, and started making my way to what you see now. Scrapped the original rock for what we have now, which is so much warmer and more natural looking."

There's much, much more I could have shown from my tour, ranging from RoseAnn's "IKEA" (an absolute treasure trove of everything from furniture to art to vehicles), all the way to Ecstasy Station, the second incredible playroom she designed for SwingSet. In truth I could have easily filled this magazine with examples of her limitless skill and creativity, so in parting here's just a few more pictures to give you an idea of what I saw.

Huge thanks to Rose for her time, and for the amazing contributions she's made to SwingSet, Modz, and all of 3DX. ❤

Psychology of the Switch

Are you dominant or submissive? Maybe you're both.

By Brianne

In my first virtual BDSM relationship, I was a submissive dating a dominant man who loved the idea of restraining me. He's leave me in a cage for hours at a time, only letting me out for sex, and pretty much treated me as his personal fuck pet. This turned me on, too, and for the majority of our relationship I was more than happy with my extremely submissive role.

Then, one day, after watching some S&M porn, I realized that I was also turned on by the idea of trying a dominant role. So, I asked him if we could try it out which, to my surprise, he didn't mind at all. And so it was that I went from being his sex toy to apprentice.

When it comes to BDSM kinks, some people, like my former partner, fit snugly into a specific role: a dominant (one who takes a controlling role) or a submissive (one who submits to the dominant partner). However, while I'm primarily submissive, I realized that I'm what's known in BDSM as a "switch."

You May Be a Switch If....

The definition of a switch is someone who enjoys engaging in both Dominant and submissive roles, or both topping and bottoming.

You may be a Switch if any of the statements listed below apply to you.:

- I prefer being Dominant with one partner, but submissive with another.
- I love being Dominant (or submissive) but occasionally enjoy mixing things up a little.
- I love taking turns dominating my partner.

- As my life has changed, I feel I'm ready to experiment with a new role in my BDSM relationship.

Some or all of these points may apply to you, but that doesn't mean you have to label yourself a switch. Of course, you don't need to date dominant partners with cage fantasies, or regularly attend BDSM dungeon parties like I did, to take pleasure in switching between being Dominant and submissive roles.

Anyone who has ever enjoyed both being spanked and taking control during sex can relate to being a switch. In fact, going between more dominant and submissive roles in bed, depending on mood and/or partner, is a natural and normal way to express your sexuality.

It's also fairly common to be a switch. There's no clinical research on exactly how prevalent switches are, but to give you an idea: The group for switches on FetLife, (a kinky social network), has over 20,000 members, while the group for submissives looking for dominant partners has about 50,000 members (although it's worth noting that this group also contains dominant members hoping to meet subs).

Not to mention, many people begin identifying as a submissive or a dominant, and then realize they want to explore the flip side. It's also normal to primarily feel more submissive or dominant, then want to experiment with role reversal. BDSM is about exploration and expression. And human sexuality is not fixed; it evolves as we experience new things."

Switching Things Up

There are lots of different ways to enjoy switching and bringing more kink to your virtual relationship. To get started, either the Dominant or submissive can just say, "I'd like to try something a little different tonight, how about..."

If you need some inspiration, here are a few ideas to get you started:

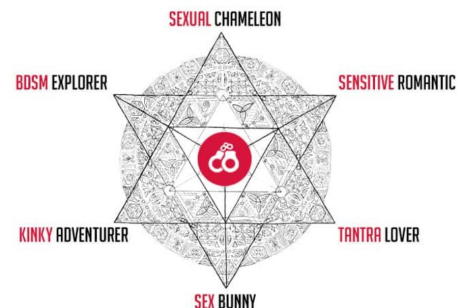

- Trying a different position during sex where the sub is on top and in control.
- If the submissive is female, having her use a strap-on.
- The sub be allowed to control the Dom's orgasm by stopping the play and taking a break.
- The Dominant can let the submissive try out flogging, paddling, or another punishment tool.
- Instead of giving commands, the Dom must say please and ask for permission.
- Temporarily allow topping from the bottom.
- The Dom has to "earn" the privilege of being with the sub.

Despite the technical sounding BDSM term, being a switch simply means that you enjoy playing various roles in the virtual bedroom. And take it from me: Freeing yourself from the role you think you should be playing during sex, and allowing yourself to experiment depending on your partner or mood, can result in some mind-blowing orgasms! ❤️

Amazing sex is all about figuring out what you like best, so why not take this short test and discover your dominant sexual archetype?

Escort of the month.

By JamieSweet

The rabbit is symbolic of cuteness, fun and frenetic sexual energy—so it's not surprising that a naughty bunny can be found at White Breeze Escorts. This month, Cybersex interviewed FeliciaKyle, perhaps the friendliest and most loveable escort in all of 3DX Chat.

Cybersex: So how did you start as an escort?

FeliciaKyle: Oh wow! Awesome question! Like many people (I hope) I often "relaxed" watching Pornhub. There were a series of videos this one woman put up that I just kept returning to. Seeing her interactions made me want to join the game.

So there I am, new, bouncing around, trying to figure out how this place works. And then I saw the name of the woman, "IamTrouble," hosting a room named "White Breeze."

I was a total fangirl and I went there right away, and everyone there was so nice! I hung with her and a few other girls. They answered all of my questions. She liked how I spoke and interacted. Then, she asked if I wanted to work with her. I was floored! I'd never thought I'd meet her, let alone get that opportunity.

She invited me for a casting, you could say. Everyone was there, watching to see what I could do, how much I could take, and, most important of all, how much I could give. The man was beautiful in mind and soul, and I had a lot of fun with him. After that, I figured I could handle anything once I knew that there were more experiences out there like that to be had.

Cybersex: Sounds like you really love being an escort. What draws you to it?

FeliciaKyle: I love connecting with people. Not just talking, but connecting. Meeting them where they are and allowing them to do the same with me. I'm also a giver. I love giving and making sure people are welcome and having a good time.

I'm the type that, I'm not having a good time unless everyone around me is, too. Then there's the sex! Sex is one of those few instances in life where people are their most authentic. Exposing yourself to someone; your body, your mind, your kinks, your desires. Trusting someone with all of that, and the uniqueness of that connection from moment to moment. I can't help but be excited by that.

I absolutely love when the person I'm with starts to let go of whatever inhibitions or reservations they have and just really gets into it. Like when a guy calls me a "slut" and then gets nervous about it as if he's said something wrong. I just play into it. I give him "the look", bite my bottom lip, and then hold on as he picks up the pace. Everyone needs encouragement!

Cybersex: Love your bunny look. Heard it's made you the unofficial mascot of White Breeze. Is the bunny look something you always maintain?

FeliciaKyle: I put on the bunny ears the day after Easter, found them to be adorable, and then just started saying bunny-themed stuff like "Follow the White Rabbit," and "You don't have to cut my foot off to get lucky". But IamTrouble gave me this picture of Alice talking to a client about her "rabbit hole costing extra". That just sealed the deal for me. The ears haven't come off since.

Cybersex: And your collar?

FeliciaKyle: It belongs to my Sylli, the woman I serve, I love, and call my wife. It started with me wearing it to match hers. Then it morphed into something else. That's all I'm gonna say about that. Oh, and the collar stays on too.

Cybersex: So you're a submissive?

FeliciaKyle: No, and I take sick perverted pleasure in hurting the heads of those that think I am!

Just kidding. No, I don't see it as simply as an either-or thing. I wouldn't call myself a switch either. It's like a dance. Sometimes you lead and sometimes you follow. But it all depends on your partner and the way the music plays. In the end, it's the connection. How you connect to the world, how the world connects to you. That person, that man, that woman.

Like, I honestly don't see why people do colds here. Why not just watch real porn? There has to be something to connect with or to submit to, or even dominate. Or simply just to be with... nothing more and nothing less.

Felicia
Kyle

Luxury Escort

WHITE
Breeze

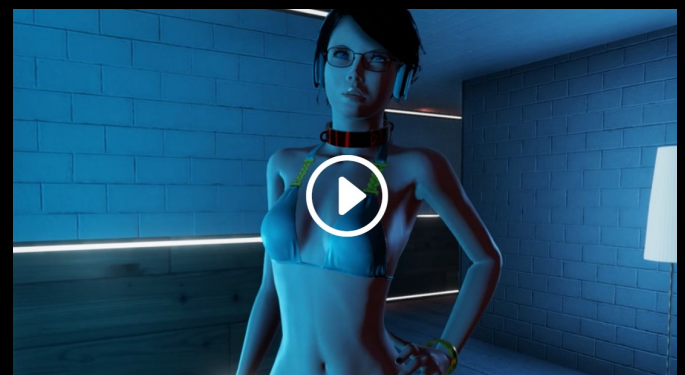

Cybersex: So how do you find being married, and being an escort? How does that work?

FeliciaKyle: For me and my wife, it works very well. We aren't possessive of one another, and we share everything we are and have. We choose to be with each other, and being apart doesn't ever mean we're away from each other.

We're poly, she knows what I do, and I know what she does. But she's first to me, as much as I love everyone and everything about White Breeze. The best is, because she knows that's how I feel about her, she'll never make me compromise. That's part of why I love her. The same could be said about White Breeze.

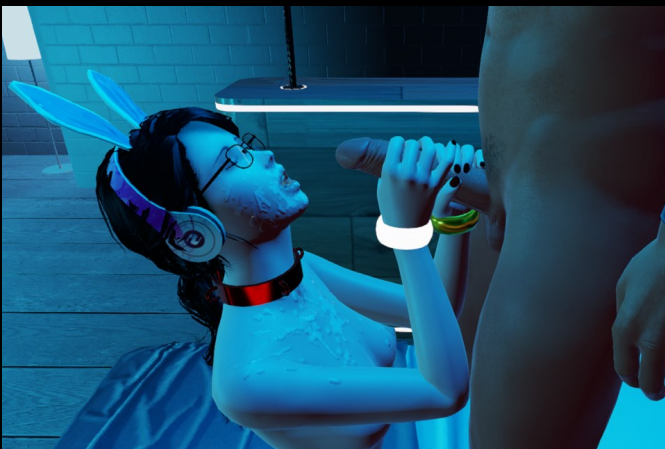

My white bracelet represents White Breeze. My Gold one is for my wife since there aren't any rings here. I'm grateful to them both and I honor them as much as I can. One knows how important the other is to me. One always helps me stay right with the other. I'm lucky to have such amazing people in my life.

Cybersex: Is there anything you don't like about being an escort?

People that feel they're too good to pay. No one is hating on you for paying for it, or judging you, or saying that you can't get it any other way.

You can still be just as smooth and enticing and slide a few gifts my way to guarantee my attention (unless you're an asshole or something). So I don't get what the problem is. But, hey, feel free to try to talk me out of my panties. Some may consider me a whore, but I'm not a slut. Well, that's not entirely true... ❤️

How To Organize a Gangbang

Ten simple steps to the most intense cybersex of your life.

By JamieSweet

I'm going to begin this article with full disclosure: I have never—either in RL or virtually—experienced a gangbang. I've partaken in numerous orgies (over 70 in fact), as well as several key parties and similar sexual events, but never was it just me and a group of men.

So what, you may quite fairly ask, qualifies me to pen this article?

The answer is that I've organized quite a few gangbangs for various friends, and from those experiences I've figured out a pretty good method of ensuring everyone has a great time.

Step One: Don't Organize Your Own Gangbang

Organizing your own gangbang is a bit like planning your own birthday party. Yeah, you could do it, but it really takes away a huge amount of joy from the event.

Gangbangs are meant to be intense sexual experiences in which you can simply let go and enjoy the sensation of just being... fucked. The last thing you want to deal with is planning the guest list and contingencies, and on the big night having the stress of cancelations, late arrivals, coordination and organization.

So the first thing you need to do is find a trusted and responsible friend, hand them this article, and ask them nicely to arrange the night for you.

Step Two: The Guest List

Let's assume the girl who would like to have her brains fucked out has listened to my first piece of advice, and that you're her new gangbang organizer. What you need to do before anything else is sit down with the person whose event you're organizing and get as big a list as possible of men she'd be comfortable with.

There's two reasons why this is important. Firstly, you're unlikely to get everyone on the list there. Some guys won't be into it. Some will have scheduling conflicts. Some will have something happen last minute and won't turn up.

Secondly, it's very important you don't make assumptions as to who the gangbangee is going to be okay with. For example, there may be a man or two in her social circle which she only tolerates because they're friends of friends. There may be one who she views more like a father or big brother than a sexual partner. There might be someone who she really likes, but who she feels might not have the right temperament for that kind of sharing.

Try your best to get a list of at least ten or so names, but more is always better.

Step Three: Figure Out a Theme

I know this might surprise some people, but gangbangs come in a variety of forms. Some are incredibly dark and dirty, with the gangbangee being fucked within an inch of her life in some back alley, while others are all silk and rose petals, with the girl being erotically worshipped like a goddess.

Some girls dream of just being taken, surrendering absolutely to the lust of both the men and herself, while others want the experience to be playful, a group of friends sharing a special night with her body as the entertainment.

In short, make sure you get a very clear idea as to what your gangbangee desires.

Step Four: Ready the Room

If the gangbangee can provide you with a room file she likes, that's ideal. If you're a good builder, then you can make one. But if you're mediocre at it (like me), and the girl doesn't have a room in mind, then approach someone with skills and ask for help.

Whatever the case, it's very important that the room is ready before you invite anyone. Wouldn't be great to have the group ready to go and have nowhere to head to.

Step Five: Set the Date

Before you approach anyone on your potential guest list, you're going to want to set a day and time that is absolutely going to work for the gangbangee. The last thing you want is her not showing up and you left in a room full of less than delighted gangbangers.

The date is also important because as you go through the guest list you want to make it as easy as possible for the guys to say yes or no, avoiding any confusion or misunderstandings. You want to be able to walk up to a guy on your list and have the conversation go like this...

You: Hi there John. I'm organizing a gangbang for Jane, and your name is on the list of men she'd like to have there. The event is on Saturday, December 21st at 5 pm Pacific Standard Time. Can you make it?

John: Yes. Yes I can.

You: Awesome. I'll be sure to remind you closer to the date, and if for any reason you can't make it let me know, okay?

John: Okay.

Simple and straightforward. That's how things need to be.

Step Six: Invite the Guys... 30 Minutes Early

Why do you want the men there early? Because, guaranteed, some of them are going to be late. Someone will get stuck in traffic, or have to sit through an unexpected update or something else will happen which puts them behind schedule. If you have no extra time allotted then your stress level is going to go through the roof.

Step Seven: Organize the Gangbangers

As the guys arrive, have them get into group chat with you and say the following:

All sex at this gangbang is going to happen in local chat, but you need to stay in group chat at all times. We want to create a really special experience for (insert gangbangee's name here), and that means you need to follow directions without her being aware they're being given.

We're going to start out with me picking two of you at random, while the rest of you gather around her. Those two guys are going to have 20 minutes to play with her, at which point it'll be the turn of the next two guys, and so on. I will time things for you and let you know when you have five minutes left.

We will keep going like this till either you're all spent, or she can't go any more.

This may sound very staged, and yes, it is. But it's a heck of a lot better than some guy getting angry about another gangbanger taking forever, or the men messaging over each other, or worse yet having them start fighting over the gangbangee.

And keep in mind, the lucky girl at the centre of the action won't be hearing any of this. For her it'll just be a seamless experience, which is exactly what you want for her.

Step Eight: Stick With the Script

Simply do exactly what you said you were going to do. As two guys start, pick two more who haven't had a turn yet and let them know they're next. Keep track of time and, if you get the chance, snap some pictures!

When everyone knows what to expect things will go very smoothly, and the stress level will be kept to a minimum.

Step Nine: Don't Panic

Yes, little things are bound to go wrong.

One of your guests who said he'd be there won't show up. The gangbangee will be five minutes late. Someone's controls will glitch in the middle of the action and they'll need to re-enter.

The worst thing you can do is lose your cool, especially as you're the one orchestrating this event. Just remember...

Step Ten: Thank the Guys

For the men who participate in gangbangs there's a lot of fun to be had, but there's also a fair bit of waiting around, to say nothing of them arranging their schedule to make it happen in the first place.

Make sure either you or the gangbangee (ideally the gangbangee) send them each a gift thanking them for being there. Doing so is not only courteous, but will make it easier to get them back if you ever need to organize another such event. ❤️
